Editorial It's Going at last!

Last month I wrote about the trials of fixing the Trident. Well I got the grommets and put the carbies back on only to have one leak, back to the spare parts desk for the bowl gaskets that I wouldn't need and another couple of days wait. Oh and I found those filters, at least one of them in the primer side of the line the main line must have been removed some other time.

I had to wait till early this week to fit them all as I was on night shift last week and the weather was still good for riding so I managed to get it going on Monday when the cold and rain started so it sits in the shed still, but at least it sounds as if it is fixed as it idled for quite a while without stopping.

I am getting really good at getting the carbies on and off. I was going to replace the sprag clutch while they were off but after pricing the part decided that I will wait until it really goes which knowing my luck will be next week.

The other thing that I forgot to mention last month was that the Norton Club had a demonstration from the bloke who manufactures the Tri-spark Electronic ignition systems manufactured for twins and triples right here in Adelaide. He gave a warts and all presentation of the development hassles and manufacturing processes that he has developed and of course had units for sale. Of course I have a unit sitting waiting for fitting to the commando.

Great gear and it is made right here in Adelaide!

President's Report

I hope you all have earmarked Friday the 24th of this month for our ride day at Mallala. The details have been public for a while now, and there's certainly nothing complicated about it. Let's hope for good weather and a large turnout of bikes and riders, some of which we haven't seen for a while.

Ride days used to be quite common in our Club, but suffered from rising costs, so all credit to our Competition Secretary, Danny Ahern, for coming up with a formula to address this. For those of us who went to the Seniors at Mac Park, reports, Club Points and true fabricated stories will have to wait for next month's "Good Oil". Speaking of the "Oil", it would be nice to have a replacement Editor for Les lined up. Even Committee Members and Editors tire and need a break. Trevor Henderson.

CLARKE'S COMMENT

I chanced upon a book a little while ago, a book left unclaimed for several days by a temporary transient and unknown character who visited my place of employment.

This is not a commentary on the contents of the book, rather the style in which it was written.

You see, the title is "My Mother Warned Me About Blokes Like Me", written by Boris Mihailovic, who some of you may know through his column in Australian Motor Cycle News. It is a series of chapters being short stories of past escapades on the edge of life and motorcycling, and previously published elsewhere in (much) tamer form.

His choice of words is, er, rather forthright, not for the faint of heart or delicate of soul. If you find this kind of language confronting, then don't bother to open the front cover, or any other part for that matter.

But therein lies the charm. His skill as a wordsmith has you sharing the related experience as if you were there, scared out of your pants, hurting from the cold of riding in sub freezing temperatures at extreme velocity, plain riding at extreme velocity, or any of his other manic activities.

His mastery of description is staggering....something most journalists could aspire to regardless of content.

Now, I wouldn't necessarily engage in any or all of the behaviours described, but I have ridden in sufficient difficult, awkward and antisocial situations to appreciate the escapades mentioned, and I know some of the country described (the high country between Sydney and northern Victoria) having been through parts of it by car a LONG time ago, and when I had my BMW R100GSPD. His words rise off the page with a disarming accuracy.

Boris was born of Serbian and Russian parents who emigrated to Australia, and from a very young age, has led a very colourful life. Psychedelic even, and this comes out in the storytelling. No holds barred.

Agree or disagree with his commentary, he still writes with panache and descriptive ability that eludes most of our professional wordsmiths. Blunt, crude and in your face he may be, his talent to write and totally engage the reader I find to be almost without peer.

Just as well he's a motorcyclist.

Nick
